

Geopolitics Impact on Global Mobility

A point of view paper

Global mobility is certainly a hot topic for businesses around the world. In particular, two major geopolitical events – the UK’s decision to leave the European Union and Donald Trump’s election to the Presidency of the United States – have helped to put the subject of international mobility of labour at the top of the agenda. Also, there are long-standing trends of high levels of global migration and the impacts of the Chinese economy.

In this paper, we will set out our point of view on how these geopolitical factors impact global mobility. We close the paper with three recommended steps that global mobility teams can take to turn these challenges into an ideal opportunity to demonstrate their value to the business.

About the authors

John Rason, Global Head of Consulting at Santa Fe Relocation Services is a commercial HR professional specialising in International HR and Global Mobility. With 25 years senior management experience at global US and UK organisations, including nearly a decade as a global mobility consultant for a leading professional services firm, his career includes two international assignments in the Nordics and Middle East and short assignments in Europe, Pakistan and the Maldives. A Chartered Fellow of the Institute of Personnel and Development, John holds an MA in Managing Human Resources from Kingston University Business School, UK

David Schofield, Director of Murray Court Consulting, specialises in the integration of mobility with talent across Europe, the Middle East and the United States. He works with CEOs and Board Members of leading multinational organisations. David has held senior positions in the fields of Global Mobility, Human Resources and Risk & Quality. David is a frequent speaker at international conferences and he has published a number of articles on talent mobility and talent management.

About us

Santa Fe Relocation Services is a global mobility company specialising in managing and delivering high-quality relocation services worldwide. Our core competence is relocation services that support corporations and their employees relocate and settle in a new country, assisting them with visas, immigration, home and school, language and cultural training, managing property rentals, delivering domestic and international moving of household goods. We have the ability to provide these services to a consistent high standard, locally and globally. A key aspect is being able to manage our service delivery through our own operations across six continents.

To view the paper in full, please click here.